HONGKONG, APRIL 25TH, 1891.

THE CHINESE CUSTOMS Report for 1890 shows a large gain in imports and a falling off in exports, the value of the former exceeding that of the latter by Tls. 40,000,000 in round numbers. These figures, however, are subjected by Mr. McKean, the Statistical Secretary, to a process of correction. The values given in the statistics being calculated on the prices in the markets of the ports at which the articles respectively enter or quit China, Mr. McKean considers it necessary to deduct the duty and charges from the value of imports and to add the duty and charges to the value of the exports, by which the true value of the goods in the ship's hold is arrived at. Thus it appears that the imports cost Tls. 109,547,057 and the exports yielded Tls. 100,199,832, giving a balance in favour of imports of over one million taels. Adding together the figures on the same basis for the last three years we find that the total imports amounted to Tls. 319,815,749 and the exports, to Tls. 317,585,376. From this it would appear at first sight that China had given away more than she had received and that the trade therefore had been unprofitable, especially as the shipments of bullion for the same period amounted to four and a half million taels more than the imports. Mr. McKean points out, however, that China paid away in these years in foreign places considerable sums in repayment of old loans without contracting new loans, and in other official disbursements, as for arms, ships, etc. If these items were taken into the account the trade would doubtless show a large profit in China's favour.

The figures for last year show an increase in the import of cotton goods of 25 per cent in value, a trifling decline in woollens, a slight increase in metals, and a very substantial increase in sundries, namely, from Tls. 33,476,878 in 1889 to Tls. 42,466,769 in 1890. Five millions of this increase are accounted for by rice alone, the quantity imported last year being 7,874,257 piculs of a value of Tls. 11,445,779 as against 4,270,878 piculs of a value of Tls. 6,021,090 in 1889. This increased import was due to scarcity in the Kwangtung province, and, as Mr. McKean remarks, it speaks marvels for the resources of that province that it can pay out 11½ million taels for food products without any unusual scarcity being heralded abroad or indications of distress being brought to the notice of the outer world. The fact is also suggestive of the extent to which trade might be expected to grow were the waterways of the province opened up to steam navigation and the numerous seaports replaced by a more equitable means of collecting the revenue. The import of rice, however, cannot in itself be looked upon as an indication of prosperity, the demand being created by a bad harvest, but the other sundries in the Customs-list which show an increase may fairly be taken as indicating the acquisition by the masses of increased comforts. The import of kerosene oil has increased in quantity from twenty to thirty million gallons, and in value from Tls. 2,900,000 to Tls. 4,000,000. Amongst other articles showing an increase are dye, ginseng, window glass, matches, and needles.

When we turn to the exports the returns are less satisfactory. Both tea and silk show a heavy decline. As regards silk the cause for the decline may, we hope, be looked upon as temporary. The yield was below the average, the rise in the value of silver had a tendency to check sales, and the demand in Europe and America was less brisk than usual. In the case of tea, unfortunately, there is less likelihood of a recovery. Nothing can save the trade but the abolition of the export duty and tax, and this is a sacrifice the Government do not seem disposed to make. The consequence is that while the world's consumption of tea is steadily increasing the export of the article from China is steadily falling off. The export of raw cotton also showed a decline last year, due to a temporary cessation of demand in Japan, owing to a bad harvest there having disabled the people from buying as usual. The export of clothing, boots, and shoes shows a decline in value from Tls. 1,709,591 to Tls. 1,428,210, due presumably to the reduced requirements of the Chinese population in the United States and Australia owing to the stoppage of emigration to those countries. Fire crackers were exported to a value of Tls. 1,124,514, which shows a decline of some Tls. 90,000. The value of fruits exported increased from Tls. 377,842 to Tls. 715,015. Gold and silver ware fell from Tls. 16,235 to Tls. 92,776, a decline which it is difficult to account for unless on the supposition that the increased value of the metal during a portion of the year lessened the demand for silver jewellery. In the export of hair there was a slight increase, the ladies of Europe having apparently not been influenced by the statement that the article comes chiefly from the heads of beggars and criminals. Hides and horns also show an increase, while leather has declined. The export of mats declined in value from Tls. 611,038 to Tls. 437,393, while in making there was an increase from Tls. 629,913 to Tls. 633,740. Medicines increased from Tls. 305,174 to Tls. 324,639. Straw hats had been almost stationary, the export last year being valued at Tls. 2,008,775 as against Tls. 2,033,775 in 1889. There was an increase in brown sugar, from Tls. 1,547,701 to Tls. 1,982,761, but both white and candy show a decrease. Tobacco continues to be exported in increasing quantities. In the returns for 1890 this article figured for Tls. 582,061, in 1888 Tls. 787,860, in 1889 Tls. 905,935, and last year Tls. 900,955. This, however, with the other articles that show an increase, goes but a little way towards making up the deficit in the more important articles of export, and a study of the table is certainly not cheering. Happily the prospects for silk and raw cotton are somewhat better this year, and the next returns may be expected to show a sensible recovery in the export trade.
